Stuck In A Moment was inspired by the mysterious death of INX singer Michael Hutchence. Bono said that he and Hutchence, a close friend, had discussed suicide before he was found in a Sydney hotel room in 1997: "We both agreed how pathetic suicide was". He said that they had 'kinda promised each other' neither of them would ever kill themselves. "Stuck In A Moment... is an argument," he said. "It's a row between mates. You're kinda trying to wake them up out of an idea. In my case it's a row I didn't have while he was alive. I feel the biggest respect I could pay to him was not to write some stupid sappy fucking song, so I wrote a really tough, nasty little number... slapping him around the head. And I'm sorry, but that's how it came out of me."
